Save your money

Why would anyone write the names of places in red on a pink background? It's completely unreadable -- an ungroovy In fact, why would anyone use a pink background for a city map? The street numbers are incredibly tiny and unreadable, and even major intersections and landmarks -- Independence Monument -- are almost impossible to find They apparently saved a lot on the graphic design, because while there is some good text descriptions, the map itself is almost useless. Save your money.

Another gem

By User's Corner

I own several of Aaron Frankel's maps. They're not only good maps, but also clever and humorous. Granted, Aaron is a middle aged male and so am I, but no matter what your age or gender, if you don't take yourself too seriously, this Cambodia map will get you around Siem Reap and Phnom Penh without issues.

Not Useful For Me

By Thomas R Leonard

I didn't find the map very useful. There are a number of locally produced maps and city guides that I found to be much more useful than this one. I found the quality of the map to be good. As with most maps, including the ones in the popular guidebooks, they are no better than the ones that can be found at most guesthouses when you are in a larger city.
